Conflict Zone Threat Assessments

For Non-Government Organisations

About

Attacks against Non-Governmental Organisations (NGOs) and other Agencies in high-risk conflict zones have increased exponentially over the last two decades.

NGOs increasingly work in the field, providing humanitarian relief and development assistance in countries around the world.

As they carry out their work, they face many serious problems. Governments or rebel groups deny them access to those in need, corrupt officials or warlords demand payoffs, and local violence threatens the safety and even the lives of field personnel.

Every NGO should instruct their key staff in the means of conducting Threat Assessments.

The VIRSEC 'Conflict Zone Threat Assessment for NGOs' online course is a training module for NGOs operating in Conflict Zones and High-Crime Areas.

The course equips the learner with knowledge regarding the most essential points of security awareness and threat assessment, and thereby assists in the making of better-informed decisions about which security strategies and procedures to adopt. After completing this module, learners will be able to:

- Articulate the link between threat assessment and security measures.
- List the three causes of threats.
- List the four general approaches to conducting threat assessments.
- List the five types of information you want to get from a threat assessment.
